Nodyn | Note

David (alive 1436), third son of Jevan or John, third son of John ap Jevan Kemeys, married Cecil, daughter and heir of Llewelyn ap Evan ap Llewelyn ap Cynfrig of Cefnmabli. The Kemeys family of Cefnmabli descended from Lewis, their eldest son, while the Kemeys family of Faendre in Monmouthshire descended from Jenkin, the younger son. The Cefnmabli estate remained in the hands of the Kemeys family until the death, unmarried, of Charles Kemeys in 1735.

He was succeeded by his sister Jane who married the Rev. John Tynte (d. 1710), 2nd baronet, of Halswell in Somerset, and rector of Goathurst. They were succeeded in turn by their three sons, Halswell Tynte (1705-30), 3rd baronet, of Halswell and Cefnmabli, whose two daughters died young, Rev. John Tynte (1707-1740, d. unm.), 4th baronet and rector of Goathurst, and Charles Kemeys Tynte (1710-1785, dsp.), 5th baronet.

Charles was succeeded by his niece Jane Hassell (1738-1824), only surviving child of Charles's sister Jane Tynte (1708-41) and her husband (m. 1737) Ruishe Hassell (d. 1749), a major in the Royal Horse Guards.

Jane Hassell married Col. John Johnson of Glaiston in Rutland and Burhill, Surrey, in 1765. On his wife's succession in 1785 he changed his name to John Johnson Kemeys-Tynte (d. 1795). They were succeeded by their son Colonel Charles Kemeys Kemeys-Tynte (b. 1788) of Halswell and Cefnmabli, who was succeeded by his son Charles John Kemeys-Tynte (b. 1800), Lieutenant-Colonel of the Glamorgan militia and MP for West Somerset 1832-1837 and Bridgwater 1847-1865. He married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Thomas Swinnerton of Butterson Hall, Staffordshire, in 1822, and was succeeded by his son Charles Kemeys-Tynte (b. 1822), colonel of the Somerset militia. Cefn Mabli remained in the hands of the Kemeys Tynte family until 1923.

Natur a chynnwys | Scope and content

Estate and family records of the Kemeys and Kemeys-Tynte families of Cefnmabli, Monmouthshire, including surveys, valuations, rentals, and accounts, 1570-[early 19 cent.]; probate records, deeds, and legal papers, 1586-[1850s]; genealogical papers, 1694-[mid-18 cent.]; and correspondence, 1642-1888. The main interest of this archive lies in the correspondence relating to political events and affairs, especially for the late seventeenth century. The archive also includes a survey of the estates of Henry, earl of Pembroke, in Glamorgan and Monmouthshire, 1570, and a rental of the estate of the regicide Henry Marten, [c. 1652].

Revokes the uses ... 1703, May 5. Natur a chynnwys Scope and content: Probate Of Will of Sir Charles Kemeys of Kevenmably, co. Glam., bart (will dated 5 June 1702). Revokes the uses contained in his marriage settlement in favour of his brother George and appoints all his lands in England and Wales to his daughter Jane, if his son Charles should die without heirs (further uses specified). Appoints man. Park Lettice in p's Llanover, Llangiew, Llanllowell and Uske, co. Mon., lately purchased from Baron Schwerin, to the same uses. Desires to be buried with his ancestors at the parish church of Michaelstone Vedow, co. Mon., where he desires that a vault may be made of the whole breadth and length of the aisle but not to meddle or alter the arched vault wherein one of his ancestors lies and desires, that whereas there is now a small door to the said aisle fronting westwards, this should be pulled down and a folding door made exactly in the middle of the same west front which he supposes would be the most convenient place to make the stairs to go to the vault, and if he dies before the vault be made then he desires to be buried somewhere in the said aisle or church either in lead or solid wood till such time as the vault be ready. Desires to be buried privately and decently and at night and that a dole be given to the poor on such occasion, namely £5 to the poor of p. Michaelstone Vedw, £5 to the poor of p. Lisvane, £5 to the poor of p. St Mellons and £2 to the poor of Lanishen. Bequeathes to his eight bearers 20s. each to buy rings, gloves, scarfs and hatbands worn on such occasions. Whereas his late wife bequeathed £50 to the poor of p's Michaelstone Vedow and Lanedern he bequeaths a similar sum for the same purpose. Bequeathes a wrought bed which is to be considered a family heirloom to his son Charles. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: P4. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The general tenor is obscure and difficult to read, but it contains references to the expected return of Lord Herbert of Raglan from a hazardous journey, the latter's favourable encounter with the King and to the despatch to the Marquis of Hertford of a commission to be delivered to Lord Herbert. Endorsement that the letter was for his most honoured cousin Sir Nicholas Kemeys, bart, high sheriff for Monmouthshire, and for his most honoured cousin John Awbrey [?Awbrey], esq., high sheriff of Glamorgan, with a note to Sir Nicholas stating 'if you will not believe me I pray look up in the inclosed list where you will find yourself ranked warm in the midst of the whole body of the Sheriffs for the Kingdom'. Sir Nicholas Kemeys was, however, not made a bart till 1642 and was sheriff of Monmouthshire in 1632, while John Awbrey was sheriff of Glamorgan in 1634. There is also a PS that the writer would be 'exceeding glad to hear that Lord Herbert is safely come home'. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C1. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	[1644 x 1645].

Nothing could be done about Lady Morgan's trust till he had replied to her letters; while she was in town she wished his leave to get a deed drawn up for the settling of the estate, as he had promised; in a draft (see 703) she had submitted, the estate was to be settled without revocation on his eldest son and £500 a piece on younger sons and daughters; she had added £400 jointure on herself, because he could not take away her claim to thirds, which would be worse for the heir and much more convenient to her than a rent charge jointure; but if Sir Charles grudged it, she would not insist; whatever she saved would be for the benefit of hers and Sir Charles's children; her children by the previous marriage were largely provided for; she raises the question of the trustees and asks if they should be the same as in a previous deed, but with her brother added, but thinks that Lord Worcester should be omitted, as it was likely that he would leave matters in the hands of his stewards; she had just received his letter in reply to queries concerning his views concerning her children's trust, but she would avoid showing it to her father, as the letter stated that he wished him out of the trust; she felt inclined to give up the whole business, but Sir Robert Sawyer favoured her administering alone. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C108. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Refers to factions and divisions in the town of Bristol; remarks that whatever Mr Morgan told him on the road, he was another man in a short time; there was a previous agreement in case of accident that Mr Probert should be the man; Sir Charles's discourse with Mr Charles and Mr Nehemiah Williams at Newport seemed to point that he depended on his friends in that place; they would not admit that anybody should have a share in that town but the House of Tredegar and were therefore jealous of having any invasion made on them. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C164. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

	John Romsey to Sir Charles Kemeys. States that the report in the Gazette about Killigrew's naval action had no more truth than that he had chased some units of the French navy who had rejoined their own fleet before he could give battle; the French fleet had been seen within a league of Weymouth, being about 100 sail; it is concluded that another squadron had gone elsewhere, it is feared, to link up with some men in Scotland; it had been reported to the mayor of Bristol that great firing had been heard on the south coast on Sunday evening and Monday morning (24-25 June), the noise going westwards, so it was concluded that our fleet had engaged them; conflicting reports to the effect that Lord Torrington had cut his cables with eagerness to be at them or to avoid being fired at his anchor; with no Dutch squadron with our fleet and Admiral Killigrew with a great squadron in the Straits, it is feared that the French knew their advantage before they would come on our coast; the easterly wind had blown both fleet westward, if the French fleet outnumbered us so greatly they would always keep one squadron to ply for the wind, while the others are engaging, and if any of our fleet happened to be disabled, the wind being easterly, they would be at the mercy of the French; there was not such great mortality among the French fleet as was claimed in the news letter; the French Gazette had stated that King James had written to inform the French King that he would require no more supplies this summer and was able to dispute every inch of the ground with the Prince of Orange; all of which, it was feared, was likely t be true, as his army was advancing and the people called 'Jacobites' were not 'out of heart'; reports a cock match in which Sir John Smyth, Capt. Piggott and others had engaged that day at Bath, which had aroused the 'jealousy' of the Government and so two troops of horses were sent to attend; the writer's sole desire was for peace and quiet, for he was perfectly one of Sir W. Coventry's 'Trimmers'; advises that the 'hott well' waters would do Sir Charles good if he was regular with them, but if he drank, as he feared, they would do him great mischief. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C181. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Glad to be favoured with a letter at the time when he was busy with the security of the Kingdom and with the 'Church of England rascals' who were to have met the French, which the author of the Modest Enquiry [Baldwin - see 170] had said should be brought to light by this time, but had not yet been as good as his word; thinks it was lucky foresight to secure Sir James Morgan, for though the greater danger was from his principles, by his experience of wars and mathematical knowledge, if applied to gunnery and fortifications, he could be 'plaguey dangerous'; such arms and horses as he had might have constituted a danger if they had fallen into the hands of some resolute Jacobites; he had been regaled last week with stories of the recent battles by certain officers, who gave more instances of the King's heroism than fame had reported of him; thanks Sir Charles for his good reports of his family and his horses.

Reports a meeting he had had with his Lordship [Worcester]; he was annoyed because Sir Charles had not consulted him or desired his interest; he could think of no action on his part which had caused Sir Charles 'to retreat'; he declared his intention not to stand himself and would have recommended and assisted him, but for Sir Charles's actions in taking no notice of him and his public declarations that he would desert his interests, offering to sign a paper to that effect, had 'given him other thoughts'; Tom Williams, brother of Sir John, came to see Worcester while they were at dinner to solicit his interest; he replied that he would not engage his interest either way, giving every man freedom of choice, any person might speak to whom he would, but he was not to make use of his name; out of the respect he still had for Sir Charles, he would not appear against him; Tom Williams had said that Arnold had declared that he had given his voice, but not his interest, and that he had secured of Charles Scudamor Abergey, Sir James Herbert, Robin Gunter and all about those parts, except Charles Price of Monmouth and Roberts of Usk; he seemed to be benefitting because Sir Charles had not the consent of the freeholders and of but a few of the gentry; he urges Sir Charles to be very industrious, otherwise it might be too late; he must urge his new friends to action; warns of the faithlessness of people he had relied on. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C272. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Invoking his aid in litigation business between him and Sir John Thomas and Elizabeth, his wife, respecting a claim to property in Holland; states that after the deaths of Sir Edmund and Anne Thomas, his step-children, without heirs, their ancestral estates came into the hands of Lady Elizabeth Thomas, sister of Edmund Thomas of Wenvoe (dec. 1677), who was judged to be the heiress at the age of 66; but it was contended that the estates which his step-children had inherited from their grandmother, Lady Morgan, which she had acquired herself, were not included in the estates which came into the possession of Sir John Thomas in the right of his wife, Elizabeth; according to the terms of the will of Lady Morgan it was provided that, in the event of her said grand children dying without heirs, her estates of inheritance in Monmouthshire, worth about £600 pa, were to go to her grand-niece, wife of Baron Swearing, a subject of the Duke Brandenburg, but that her estates in Holland were given to her grandchildren absolutely, and were disposable by will, which he, Sir Charles, had proved. References to financial difficulties; it was a 'chargeable' business distraining on tenants, costing in one tenement £18 already and would cost as much again; unless expenses were severely cut he could not maintain his lawsuit very long; if he should lose it, he and his children would be in a sad condition; everybody was demanding money; she could not get money in to pay the workmen; Mr Ginins of Boolhoch wanted money badly; she was unable to meet bills from Newport and Cardiff; inability to pay would not long be accepted by those who knew the condition of the estate, and which could not long be kept quiet, when they failed to pay the home expenses; when he went away he had promised to consider the matter, but the huge expense of his journey only as far as Bristol made her fear that he had quite forgotten himself again; a Mr Mansell of Gloster had offered 10s. per ton for all the beech wood; he seemed to have a mind to buy the oak tree also, but said it was a pity to cut it down till barking time. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C337. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	[1698?], Dec. 6.

Thanks him for sending her a valentine; it had been decided to bring their law business to the House of Lords, when new counsel would be necessary, and it was decided to try to engage Sergeant Right; her brother, Lord Wharton, and Mr Edwards would take his advice as to whether there was any hazard of losing what they have got by endeavouring to get more; Mr Edwards had told her that he, Sir Charles, was obliged to pay only £3,000 to his brother and sisters, the other £1,500 was to be paid out of his father's personal estate by his mother; he was also not obliged to pay interest, but merely to maintain them; they were not to be paid any part of the £3,000 till Mr Gwin's debt was paid; the portions were to be raised out of the growing rents of the estate as they came in, so he had paid £1,500 more than was due and interest for £5,000 for the last 15 or 16 years wholly in his own wrong; wishes him to seek Mr Price's opinion on the matter; it was a matter of doubt whether his father had the power to dispose of Llanvaire and leave it to his brother, to decide which it would be necessary to see the deed of settlement his grandfather had made on his father's marriage to his first wife, and that which he made upon his marrying uncle Kemeys's mother, who was his last wife; Sir John Aubrey had told her that neither his own nor Mr Morgan's election was likely to be cleared that session; her brother had told her that he intended to sell land shortly, when he as good as promised to pay what he owes, but she could not get one farthing at the moment; she was having fresh dun[n]ers; her brother had told her that he believed that Morgan would give Sir Charles his interest, when his own election was settled, because he had promised it, but would nevertheless be glad to be relieved of his promise. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C352. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

The doctor had said that Jenny was as well as could be expected from one who had small pox so much, but could not say till the 9th or even 11th day whether the danger was over; she discounts Lloyd's report that Lady Thomas intended to appeal; yesterday, Richard Carne came from her with a proposal to accommodate their differences; she said that this was a strange time to suggest this, but, as she was so weary of litigation, she would send Sir Charles word of what they said; if he was willing, she would see Mr Price about it and get him and their other counsel to make an account of all that was demanded as their due both here and in Holland, with the just law charges, at which Mr Carne seemed well satisfied; Mr Price believed that it was only a design to defer the business longer, but he would discuss the matter with Mr Barber and let her know his opinion, about which she had not yet heard; she believes that he had seen Mr Edwards, who had satisfied him concerning the reasonableness of the security to be assigned by him for the children and also concerning the settlement to be made to him, about which she was well satisfied; for the estate was engaged to pay £3,000, yet he freely gave £4,500, so that he gave an additional £500 each to his brother and sisters, which they were to have as the estate would raise it, but subject to interest, which quite broke the estate; she advises Sir Charles to get a proper account of his liabilities and not be always paying a debt which could never be satisfied; she did not wish any differences to arise between him and them [his brother and sisters], but it was the only way to have an agreement which would hold for ever; the illness of Jenny had prevented her seeing her brother [Wharton], but he had told her previously that he had agreed to sell lands to pay all his debts, but she was trying to get him to turn over to her some tenants to pay her £400 pa for three years, forgoing the interest, as it was better to do that than to be without interest and principal so long; the land which by the deed Mr Edwards had drawn up to secure the children's money was left in trust, in case of her death, to her brother, but she had left a blank for Sir Charles to name whom he thought fit, which, by her consent, would be no relation of hers, 'for in trusting relations in things of that kind, one loses both friend and money'; her son Charles continued well, but if he or she got an infection she would rather it broke out in London; it was better to stay there till they saw what Lady Thomas's treaty would come to, or, if it falls off, to get the account ready to give in to the Master in Chancery; hopes he would not come up just yet, as they were in so much dis-order; Mr Morgan of Tredegar had written to say that he would have come to see her but he was afraid of the small pox; 'littie' Morgan had come from Mr Price, who had sent for Mr Barber, but he refused to come; they wished that Sir Charles and Sir John Thomas should end the business themselves, but they would have nothing to do with Mr Price, but Morgan had insisted that Sir Charles would do nothing without Mr Price. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C361. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

Refers to the original book of records of the town of Cardiff which was kept under three locks and keys; disputes the validity of the recent election of a bailiff, firstly because it was signed by only one bailiff, and, secondly, because it was conducted in a manner quite contrary to the ancient usage of the Corporation, as the bailiff and the rest of the Aldermen could attest on oath, as he himself intended to do at the next town Quarter Sessions, where there would be a further examination as to whether our burgesses ever appeared at the election of bailiffs; but whether they did so or not, he considered it unreasonable if it should be so, as such an election would be as tumultuous as that of a Parliament man; it also seemed pretty odd to him that three JPs of the country should concern themselves in the town hall in the election of bailiffs; he would write to Bailiff Stephens and John Archer to relate to him other aspects of the matter; they were determined to try the validity of this election by law, and until that was done everything must stand as they were; there were several precedents for the continuance in office of bailiffs for two years or more. The election for Monmouth would be on Tuesday 14th inst.; desires him to send him what votes he has in Newport and Uske and urges him to quicken his friends in or near both towns to be active and speedy; begs for his vote, which would be in compensation for the pains he had taken in Sir Charles's service; claims to have done as much 'in these two hundreds' for his interest in 4 days as others had done against him in 10; many of his freeholders of Cwmjoy and Skentfreth would want horses and it was said that Sir Charles's voters should have neither horse meat, man's meat, drink or, what's worse, bed at Newport. In a PS he recalls that at the election in Monmouth in 1696, Sir Charles and his cousin Morgan served as knights, and he [Arnold] as burgess for Monmouth, when Sir Charles promised that he would resign the next turn to Sir John Williams and Arnold himself to Col. Probert, which they both did in 1698; the three persons then elected promised that in the following Parliament Sir Charles should be Knight and Arnold burgess; both he and Sir Charles had a right to expect that the solemn promises of gentlemen be relied on. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C412. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

States that Price's mother was not entitled to timber under her lease 'if not on the premises to be found'; Robert Thomas's lease of Highlight did not expire till Michaelmas 1792; it is contended that he had fallen considerably short in the performance of his covenants, particularly with the building of a farm house, now in an unfinished state; Mr Woodcock had time to consider if R. Thomas at the end of the term would be entitled to £100 mentioned in the covenant, which he believed not; but if he was he would soon be reimbursed from the improvement in the rent; asks if this farm would not suit Mr Duckett, though he feared from the living standards of considerable farmers in England he would expect a large sum to be laid out on the house and other conveniences; Mr Glover, who had lately purchased the manor of Abercarn of Mr John for, it is said, £25,000, was the owner of considerable Iron Works at Abercarn and Hirwaun; he resided mostly at Birmingham. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C548. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)	1791, July 20.

Had sent hares to Harris; he had written to Biedermann respecting Rudry coal; he had agreed with Harford & Co., subject to approval, to let them have the coal pit at 6d. per ton, they paying all expenses, which, with the present but thin vein, would amount to £50 pa; when the level (drain) was got up to the hill there was a vein 6 foot thick; has no doubt that the tonnage would bring in three times the above sum; John had had a great loss being unable to dispose of small coal, which could only be used for lime burning and, there being no [kilns] on the estate, it was all dead stock; believes that it would not pay to send coal to Bridgewater, as the carriage to Peterston would cost more than it could be bought for at Newport; advises him to purchase the lease from John, brother of James Thomas of Highlight, of the farm he held under him near Funmon, from which he cleared £30 pa; discusses the purchase of the land tax on his property in Cardiff and Monmouth; hopes to bring £250 to Biedermann in next fortnight. Nodyn Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C561. Lleoliad ffisegol Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

States that there was no doubt as to practicability of a railroad from his Coal Works near Machen, which would follow the same valley and take mainly the same windings as the river does, a distance to Rumney bridge of 8 miles, according to Biedermann's estimate; the railroads on the Monmouth Canal had cost £1,500 per mile, but on a less expensive plan all expenses, including the purchase of lands, would be not much less than £900 to £1,000 per mile; but, while there were considerable beds of coal, yet it was so unfavourably situated, dipping as much as 1 yard in 2, that it was not at all favourable to an extensive work, and, compared to other situations, would remain years before a situation of this kind would be looked for; though it would be well to let the Work to a safe tenant, he could not advise the building of a railroad at so considerable cost and opening a Work on a large scale. Nodyn / Note [generalNote]: Preferred citation: C564. Lleoliad ffisegol / Physical location: ARCH/MSS (GB0210)

'We' had a verdict at the trial with Sir John Thomas for so much of the estate as lies in co. 'We' hoped that having obtained this verdict against Sir John Thomas he would not have given 'us' the trouble of a second trial at Hereford for the Glamorganshire estate, but to have relinquished his plea and given us judgement. As the cause was called 'we' found there was no fine levied by William Thomas of the lands in Glamorganshire which were Miss Oldsworth's jointure pursuant to his voluntary settlement in 1676. We therefore stood on a fine levied in 1674 and the deed of 1676 and obtained a verdict and now 'we' are sure to recover the rest at any time.
